NAVAJO BLANKETS AND CURIOS

FLAGSTAFF, ARIZONA

NAVAJO RUGS RAPIDLY BECOMING A LOST ART.

Many years ago, long before the white man was known in the Great South West, Navajo Indians were weaving their own blankets, clothing, etc. from the pulled wool of sheep which they raised for that purpose. They carded, spun and wove the blankets by hand and this is still done by the old and feeble squaws who will never forget how to weave a beautiful blanket until they pass into the Happy Hunting Grounds.

It is interesting to the tourist in the Navajo Country to ride among a land of barren mesas, rocks, and twisted pinons, and find a ragged Navajo Squaw under the shelter of a pinon tree squatted before a loom made of three sticks, a rope and some stones weaving a beautiful, more durable rug than is turned out by the costly looms of Europe, Asia, or America. A stick holds the alternate cords of the wool apart in opposite directions and thus enables her to run the successive threads of the warp across. It is little wonder that these rugs will hold water and stand the tramping of a lifetime, as each thread across the wool is pounded down with force by a forked stick.

Navajo rugs are made entirely of wool. White, black, brown, grey and red are the colors used. All colors are natural except the red. The brown is taken from the belly of certain sheep and the grey is made by spinning the white and black until the proper color is obtained.

The designs are characteristic and admirably worked out. The weaver traces the pattern on sand before beginning the most intricate design but for simpler ones the squaw composes it in her head as she progresses. Each and every pattern has a meaning. It requires from two to twelve months of hard work to make one rug, all according to size and design.

Owing to the increased number of Schools on the Reservation which forces the children to attend School at an early age, those who do not find employment elsewhere, return to the primitive mode of living, but have quite lost the art of weaving. It is only a matter of a few years until these rare specimens of Indian Handicraft will be gone forever.

We, the undersigned, are situated in the heart of Navajo Country, operating nine trading posts on the Reservation, where we procure our Blankets, Baskets, and Silverware direct from the Indians, by trading merchandise to them for their wares and therefore can sell at the lowest prices at all times.

Remember, if you invest in one of these rugs now and use it for twenty years, you can resell it for ten times the amount you pay.

They are very appropriate for the home, fireplace, bath, porch, office or den.

Prices of these rugs vary according to quality of weave and design.

To responsible parties we will ship on open account, others will please remit when ordering or we will ship C. C. D.

Yours very truly,

BABBITT BROTHERS TRADING COMPANY.

Dear Sir:

We have received your circular explaining all about the old Spanish songs of the Southwest which you have collected for a good many years. However, you did not give us the prices on these books. We are dealers here and think that we could sell quite a number of these during the tourist season this spring and summer and we would appreciate your advising us your quantity prices.

Very truly yours,

BABBITT BROTHERS TRADING CO.
